Question 2176) - Two men both claim to own a cloth and produce evidence that they owned it from its time of embroiding. The one has it in his possession and the other does not. Whose claim will be preferred?

A: The one who has it in his possession is preferred in cloths which are only embroided once. Similarly any item whose cause of ownership occurs only once is the treated the same in the above scenario.

~ al-Quduri ~